MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 24.

DEATH OF A NOTORIOUS BRIGAND. Guicche, the brigand of Arezzo, Italy, was shot recently by the King's carbineers. He was. it is said, the terror but also the boast of the neighborhood; and, no less from admiration than from fear, he was always sure, so long as he could elude the blood-hounds of the law, of a supper and a sweetheart. Justice was over and over again suspended by the dread of his anger; and tempting posts, usually so coveted in Italy; were refused by one official after another in deference to his mandates. The mode of his capture was in keeping with the remainder of his evenful history. Three of his pursuers took refuge one evening with a alley in the rear. Possession can be had on the poor and aged couple, and their suspicious first of June. Apply at MILBURN'S POTTEpoor and aged couple, and their suspicious first of June. Apply at Merce at once aroused by seeing before them RY, 127 Wilkes street. the promise of a more sumptuous repast than was warranted by the peasants' condition. The supper was preparing for Guicche, and the fact was extorted from the temporizing pair. The carbineers lay in wait for the solitary bravo, who soon came along singing a rispetto, or love song, and they dispatched him before he had time to do more than bite off one of their fingers.

"Is THAT anthracite or bituminous?" asked a gentleman the other day of a man engaged in dumping a load of coal down a hole in the deck of one of the Brooklyn ferry-boats.— "Eh?" replied the man of coal. "Is that anthracite or bituminous?" again inquired the seeker of knowledge, in a bland and conciliatary voice. "Ef you mean that place where I'm dumpin' this here coal down, it's the fireroom," replied the son of toil, with a look of pity at the questioner for his ignorance. There were no more questions asked.
